WESTERN BALKANS

There are six candidate/potential candidate countries from the Western Balkans:

- Montenegro (accession negotiation started in 2012)
- Serbia (accession negotiation started in 2014)
- The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (candidate country since 2005)
- Albania (candidate country since 2014)
- Bosnia and Herzegovina (application to join the EU submitted in February 2016)
- Kosovo (Stabilisation and Association Agreement entered into force in April 2016)

The 2018 Enlargement strategy of the European Commission has six flagship initiatives:

- Strengthen the rule of law
- Enhance support for socio-economic development
- Reinforce engagement on security and migration
- Increase transport and energy connectivity
- Develop the digital agenda for the Western Balkans
- Support reconciliation and good neighbourly relations

ENLARGEMENT CRITERIA

The Treaty on the European Union states that any European country may apply for membership if it respects the democratic values of the EU and is committed to promoting them. The EU also needs to be able to integrate new members.

Countries wishing to join the European Union must have:

- stable institutions guaranteeing democracy, the rule of law, human rights and respect for and protection of minorities;
- a functioning market economy and the capacity to cope with competition and market forces in the EU;
- the ability to take on and implement effectively the obligations of membership, including adherence to the aims of political, economic and monetary union.

In order to meet the well-established membership criteria and in their own interest, the Western Balkans need to implement comprehensive reforms in crucial areas. The rule of law, fundamental rights and governance must be strengthened significantly. Judicial reforms, the fight against corruption and organised crime, and public administration reform need to deliver real results and the functioning of democratic institutions needs to be seriously enhanced. Economic reforms must be pursued with vigour and structural weaknesses, low competitiveness and high unemployment addressed.

All countries must unequivocally commit, in both word and deed, to overcoming the legacy of the past, by achieving reconciliation and solving open issues well before their accession to the EU, in particular border disputes.

ECR Priorities

Where should the EU make a special effort in assisting accession countries:

1. Security and migration:

- Radicalisation should be addressed since no country will be able to join the EU if there are concerns that this will pose a threat to the European security;
- Cooperation with neighbours, EU Member States, and with the European Border and Coast Guard Agency is required to manage migration flows;
- Limit Russian influence in the Western Balkans and support the countries in their wish to join NATO;

2. Economic and social development:

- Development of infrastructure and transport corridors is required to stimulate regional development, trade and people-to-people contact;
- The private sector is underdeveloped and often hampered by weaknesses in the rule of law and the enforcement of fair competition;
- The more economically developed candidate countries are at time of accession to the EU, the less internal migration to Western EU countries will follow;

3. Rule of law, the fight against corruption and organised crime:

- Political influence over the judiciary greatly undermines the rule of law;
- Corruption remains prevalent in many areas and there is a limited number of final court rulings on high-level corruption cases;
- Track record on investigations, prosecutions and convictions in the fight against organised crime needs to be improved;

4. Good neighbourly relations:

- Cross-border cooperation and good neighbourly relations could bring investment and growth to the often forgotten and underdeveloped border regions;
- National minorities is a key issue for maintaining good neighbourly relations. If the rights and freedoms of national minorities are not protected, neighbouring countries could threaten to block the EU accession negotiations.

Key findings of the 2018 Enlargement reports:

On the 17th of April at an extraordinary meeting of the AFET committee, VP/HR Federica Mogherini and the Commissioner for European Neighbourhood Policy and Enlargement Negotiations Johannes Hahn, presented the enlargement package reports for 2018. The most important part of this package are the seven individual country reports for the five candidate countries as well as the 2 partners from the Western Balkans (Kosovo and Turkey).

Accession to the EU is the current goal of the Western Balkan countries, but for some, the very commencement of the accession negotiations is already a big success. Only Serbia and Montenegro have commenced the official negotiations to join the EU and they are expected to be ready for accession in 2025. However, to achieve this, the frontrunners Serbia and Montenegro must deliver real and sustained reforms and definitive solutions to disputes with neighbours.

Charles Tannock
(ECR Rapporteur)

Montenegro

The first major success for the EU accession ambitions of Montenegro came when the country joined NATO in 2017. The European Commission notes this progress. It should be mentioned that Montenegro is the first of the candidate countries to fully align its foreign policy with the EU's. There is also significant progress in the fight against corruption and public administration reform. However, there still remain significant challenges. Public procurement procedures are still problematic in the country, and this is duly noted in the report of the European Commission. Furthermore, the country is struggling to fulfil the economic criteria. The Commission advises that the trade deficit has a negative effect on the economy, and that Montenegro's economy should focus more on exports. The shadow economy and the general business environment still remains a problem too.

Charles Tannock (ECR Rapporteur): "I think that on balance the Commission report for Montenegro is a fair assessment of the progress and challenges that the country faces. That it remains the front runner in the accession process is clearly demonstrated. With nearly all negotiation chapters now opened, Montenegro is in a good position to consolidate its progress and focus efforts on those areas highlighted for improvement."

Serbia

The European Commission acknowledges the progress in certain areas such as macroeconomic stability and the plan for administrative reform. Some progress has been achieved, especially in adopting amendments to the Criminal Code in the economic crimes section; including the law on the organisation of state authorities in the fight against corruption, organised crime and terrorism. Serbia has also continued to align its legislation with the EU acquis. There are however, other worrying trends. One example that has been noted by the Commission is the fact that some areas in Serbia which are populated by national minorities remain underfunded and underdeveloped in comparison with other areas of the country. The biggest challenge for Serbia remains the normalisation of relations with Kosovo. The European Commission recommends that the country should continue dialogue with Kosovo. Efforts should also be made in order to achieve a legally binding bilateral agreement for dialogue. This is regarded by the European Commission as a necessary step in order for Serbia to continue on the path of EU accession.

Charles Tannock (ECR Shadow Rapporteur): Along with Montenegro, Serbia could potentially be ready for European Union membership by 2025 according to the European Commission. I welcome the ambition and strongly support enlargement for the entire region. However I remain committed to the regatta process and believe that each country must be judged on its own merit. Montenegro is clearly some way ahead of Serbia in terms of its progress and I would be disappointed to see it held back.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

This year's report on the progress of FYROM was among the most positive ones. The incumbent government in the country, in power since 2016, has been productive in the process of reforming it. It has to be noted that back in 2004, FYROM was regarded as the frontrunner country from the Western Balkans in the process of EU accession. It had successfully resolved the ethnic conflict that erupted in 2001 and was on a positive path forward. Sadly, a period of stagnation followed and urgent reforms were needed. The new coalition government has been committed to ambitious internal reforms and more importantly has taken an active role in resolving the issues that exist between the country and its neighbours. A good example of this can be seen in the Treaty on friendship, good neighbourly relations and cooperation between Bulgaria and FYR of Macedonia. These efforts are assessed positively by the European Commission, which ultimately gave a recommendation for beginning negotiations with FYROM.

Charles Tannock (ECR Shadow Rapporteur): I welcome the proposal to launch negotiations with Macedonia, which has sadly been left in limbo for over a decade. I hope that this can also give a boost to the ongoing talks with Greece on the name issue, clearing the way for approval by the Council later this year and ultimately the country's long discussed ambitions to join the EU.

Albania

Monica Macovei
(Chair of the Delegation to the EU-Albania Stabilisation and Association Parliamentary Committee)

In regards to Albania, the European Commission has emphasised strongly the need for judicial reform in the country. The essence of the reforms is the new way in which public procurement is being conducted. Judges and administrators in the judiciary are now the subject of a thorough vetting process. The European Commission seems committed to supporting these efforts, and as with FYROM, it has given a recommendation for beginning accession negotiations.

Monica Macovei (Chair of the Delegation to the EU-Albania Stabilisation and Association Parliamentary Committee): I welcome the recent Commission's decision on recommending accession negotiations with Albania. Albania has made substantial progress in the field of public administration and justice. An all-inclusive vetting process has begun and the establishment of an independent and non-corrupt judiciary is ongoing. Measures have been adopted against criminal organisations; furthermore, an important agreement has been signed between Tirana and Frontex. I encourage the Albanian political parties to make concerted efforts in order to achieve sustainable, cross-party cooperation and reforms, and positively contribute to Albania's progress towards the EU.

Kosovo***

Bas Belder
(ECR Shadow Rapporteur)

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Sadly, the European Commission notes a period of stagnation when it comes to Bosnia's path of accession. The report points out the structural issues in the way in which the institutions in the country function. The Commission notes that the reforms are insufficient across all areas. Another major issue is the fact that the country still does not have a national programme for aligning the legislation with the EU acquis. There are also issues regarding human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Bas Belder (ECR Shadow Rapporteur): The progress Bosnia and Herzegovina made over the last year on its path towards EU integration has unfortunately remained very limited. Further actions are urgently needed at a much quicker pace, e.g. in areas of reform of the public administration and judiciary, reform of the election law with a view on the forthcoming elections and in combating widespread corruption. The security situation in the country remains an issue of concern given the separatist rhetoric in Republica Srpska and the return of foreign fighters. I am of the opinion that the path towards EU integration is the only viable option for the future of the country and its people.

Angel Dzhambazki
(ECR Shadow Rapporteur)

An important achievement for Kosovo is the signing of the border demarcation agreement with Montenegro in March 2018, one of the key requirements of the European Commission to move forward with the visa liberalisation for Kosovo. The other prerequisite for obtaining visa free regime is to create a credible track record in the fight against organised crime, however, there is still a long way to go in order to achieve this. This is in part, due to the inability of the new coalition government to bring forward strategic EU related reforms in the judicial system, the fight against corruption and the fight against organised crime. Kosovo's economy, on the other hand, while still at a development phase, has made good progress. This could be attributed to the government's adherence to a strict fiscal rule on its budget deficit as well as Kosovo's improved business climate. However, the economy's informal nature and remaining corruption remain major challenges. The main issue that still holds back Kosovo and its further integration, is its relations with Serbia and the fact that several EU Members States still do not recognise the independence of Kosovo. While the European Commission notes that Kosovo has remained engaged in dialogue, it needs to make further efforts.

Angel Dzhambazki (ECR Shadow Rapporteur): I would like to congratulate the Kosovo authorities, who despite strong opposition from some parties, where teargas was used to disrupt the parliamentary work and voting process, the Parliament of Kosovo still managed to ratify the long awaited border demarcation agreement with Montenegro. Now is the time for Kosovo to focus on reforming its judicial system and make enormous efforts to fight corruption and organised crime. Building a track record in this field will not only help the country to move forward towards a visa free regime for the Kosovo people traveling to the EU, but it may also improve the chances of this country gaining additional recognition.
